What did the Warwick Report say?

In outlining the background to the research project, the Warwick Report included the following comment on 'previous research':

Although there has been some international research on religious education textbooks, on the representation of Islam in European textbooks, for example (Falaturi, 1988; Falaturi & Tworuschka, 1992), no research has surveyed the use of books and materials on world religions across England or the UK. However, some UK projects have linked theory, textbooks, and occasionally empirical research. These include the Chichester Project, on Christianity (e.g. Brown, 2000; Hayward, 1987), the Westhill Project (e.g. Rudge, 2000), the Religion in the Service of the Child Project (e.g. Hull 2000) the Warwick RE Project (e.g. Jackson, 2000, 2006) and the Stapleford Project (e.g. Cooling, 2000).
